OPPOSITION OF CAPITAL TO LABOR

There is no disguising the fact that a severe contention is upon the country between organized capital and labor. Strikes are among the chief features that make known to the world that there is present and going forward in it a contention that will affect its future for good or evil, as the causes involved are determined. Labor has taken position to secure its protection against soulless organized capital in the hands of soulless men whose object it seems to be to crush the vitality there is in laboring men. The means used to secure the end desired by capital is starvation, which has been in all ages the weapon used to put down labor by those who enslave it.

There is not anything new in the starvation process when applied to labor, as it has been a means applied at the command of those who gather its rewards from the early history of the race. When the landed proprietors of ancient and medieval Europe were in control over it, starvation was the means applied to control and enslave it. The land proprietor has lost control over it and capital has become a more harsh master, if such a thing is possible, than the land proprietor were in former times.

The great strike among the miners in Pennsylvania is a result of insufficient wages to secure the food required to live. Insufficient wages to procure a living is not so much attributable to any direct reduction in wages, as it is a result of the increased price of the necessities of life, caused by trusts that control these necessities to life and its comforts. The comforts have been gradually dispensed with until they are largely taken away, and the naked problem of sufficient to live upon is up for settlement between the trusts and not less than one hundred thousand men, besides those dependent upon them.

The coal trusts claim that more than is now paid from prices received in the markets for coal products cannot be paid to the miners. Dividends on capital invested in coal producing enterprises must be maintained and paid. Capital is first and labor is last when profits on capital investments are involved. Which is the old argument against labor; capital first and labor last. Labor must yield its comforts, and it need be if it must part with the means of life in the interest of capital. When it has occurred to capital that there is a duty upon it to yield a part of its dividends to labor when it is in distress, there will be a better understanding between capital and labor.

Capital has its rights which must be recognized in business relations, but it does not have all the rights there are on the earth or between the heaven and the earth. There are too many reasons present which tend to cause an opinion to be arrived at by disinterested observers that organized capital has made a conclusion and a judgment which it is acting upon, to the effect that the only rights there are on the earth which should be respected are the rights of organized capital. The chief trouble there is between capital and labor is in the view taken by capital when in organized form respecting its rights, which is that its rights are superior to the rights of the human family, which view taken is expressed in the words, "The dollar is above the man."

The contention between organized capital and organized labor, or in its simple or disorganized form is passing beyond the strict environment of labor to a field which includes a political future. The contention is made by capital through its seeming determined purpose to rule the earth by levying tribute through a system of trusts upon all men. When capital begins to feel the pressure of an organized manhood there will be in the world to meet its encroachments, it will claim as it always has claimed when it was made to understand there was an opposing force that labor is opposed to capital. Which in a sense has been and will continue to be true when labor is opposing its over-reaching, domineering influence and power which it is continually engaged in asserting and extending, regardless of the natural rights of man.

is creditable to the State and to those who have made it. The fair of 1900 will be an advertisement worthy of our people as appearances are at present. When the products as exhibits are in place they will be reviewed by the JOURNAL upon their merits. There is present a spirit of friendly contention that bids exhibitors to place the best products they have upon exhibition, which spirit should be cultivated by the people not for the pecuniary value there is in awards which are small, but for the value there is in the exhibits as advertisements of the natural capacity there is in the soils in the State to produce, also for the purpose of showing its valuable mineral deposits, which are not least among its many superior natural advantages.

The value derived from exhibits is general and not special. The value of each property interested is more or less favorably effected by superior examples of its products when placed on exhibition at fairs, which is the chief source through which awards are made that are valuable to the people. When our fair exhibits are considered in the light they should be, respecting their beneficial effect, it will be understood that the young and old, the rich and poor, are alike effected beneficially. The general good is secured by an increase in investments made for general and special purposes. Business is made better and products are more sought after as a demand for their use is increased through knowledge of the general productiveness of the State.

MINING AND ORE REDUCTION.

That this section is coming to the front in a mining sense will be evident to all who see the exhibits.

There are numerous private collections of mineral specimens, including the Maxou cabinet.

Copper ores are exhibited from the Hizby mine, the Edwards and Norton mine and the Dogskin mountain mines.

The Reno Smelting and Milling Company had half a ton of pig copper on display, but it has been removed.

The Electric Mining and Reduction Company of this city has a magnificent collection, consisting of ores, fluxes and bullion. There are heaps of their several varieties of ore, carrying gold, silver, copper, lead, antimony, zinc and cobalt.

Some Wedekind ore is shown in the form of battery samples. There is a pan of copper tailings to be treated by the Leibey electrical process, a quantity of gold and silver concentrates, two large bars of bullion, samples of fluxes, including calcareous sedimentary rock and 60 per cent iron ore from H. Ritter's mine.

O. A. Richardson displays a pile of gold, silver, copper and lead ores.

Lem Allen has a heap of specimens of gold, silver, zinc, tin and copper ores from the Sand Spring mine.

There is a big slab of cinnabar ore from Steamboat.

George D. Burton displays onyx specimens from his Oregon claims.

NEVADA SCORES STEWART

He Is Charged With Bad Faith.

F. G. NEWLANDS ENDORSED

Southern Pacific Representative Loses Power to Dominate.

There was filed with the Secretary of State recently a certificate of nomination of the Democratic and Silver Party fusion ticket as follows:

For Congressman, Francis G. Newlands of Washoe; Justice Supreme Court, A. L. Fitzgerald of Eureka; Electors, John H. Dennis of Washoe, John C. Weber of White Pine and Richard Kirman of Ormsby; Regent, State University, long term, J. N. Evans of Washoe; short term, W. W. Booher of Eureka.

The chief feature of the fusion convention was the complete overthrow of the Southern Pacific's legal boss, O. C. Wallace. This wipes him out of all parties except the Republican. The fusion ticket is bound to win, which means an end to his domination.

The Democratic platform was notable chiefly for this denunciation of Senator Stewart:

"We congratulate the bimetallists of Nevada upon being rid of an impostor who has practised upon their credulity for the last twelve years. We allude to Senator William M. Stewart, who has at last thrown off the silver-plated mask, which he so clumsily wore during three senatorial campaigns, and now he appears in his true character of a Republican camp follower and subservient tool of the present gold standard, imperialistic and trust-fostering administration. We wish our opponents the same unalloyed joy upon their acquittal that is experienced by all true silver men in their riddance of a traitor, and his conversion from a pretended friend to an open and therefore harmless enemy."

Next follows this strong endorsement of Congressman Newlands:

"We recognize in our Representative in Congress, the Hon. Francis G. Newlands, an honest and capable legislator, who has been faithful to his trust and devoted to the best interests of Nevada. We resent the insinuation in the Republican platform, that he is not a bona-fide member of the commonwealth, and we declare that his residence of twelve years in this State, his home in Washoe county, his identification with the various interests of Nevada, his active identification with the silver question, both before and after he entered Congress, his long and honorable service in Congress, during which he has been advanced from one important committee to another until now he is a member of the leading and governing committee of the House, the Ways and Means, and his record as evidenced by his votes in Congress, command him to the favorable consideration of the voters of Nevada at the ensuing election."

The Southern Pacific representative, O. C. Wallace, is next taken care of as follows:

"The Central Pacific railroad debt having been funded and the control of that railroad having become vested in the Southern Pacific, we recognize the fact that for many years transportation in the State will be in the control of the Southern Pacific system. While we favored national legislation by which the Central Pacific would have been held as an independent line according to its original purpose, we realize that recent events have rendered this hope impossible, and that the development of this State will mainly depend upon liberal policy and wise management of the Southern Pacific system. We invite the co-operation of the management of the Southern Pacific in the building up of the commonwealth, the development of its resources, the increase of the population and in the economic advancement and beneficial government of the State."

"We suggest the appointment of a general manager or agent in this State, trained in the science of railroading, and whose residence here will bring him in touch with the public-spirited citizens of the commonwealth, with its varied industries and enterprises, and with the needs and requirements of the people, as well as in sympathy with the measures tending to good government, in the place of permitting the officious intermingling with our local political affairs by a railroad underling whose residence is in California, who has no knowledge of our interests in State development, whose activity in the State is purely political in character, and who obtrudes his offensive personality into every branch of our State, municipal and county government, and interferes in legislation with which the railroad has no concern."

"The principle of home rule requires that this officious intermingling with our affairs by a non-resident boss should end."

A resolution presented in the Silver Party platform gives a curious illustration of changes time will bring. Two
